After all the work and all the money spent to prove Microsoft broke the law, now we've decided to back down?

This is crazy. Microsoft is the most monopolistic company of all time, and have crushed hundreds of competitors. They are not innovative and lack of innovation has created a nightmare system. Their security holes have cost billions of dollars for which all they do is fix the hole.

This sounds like a complete political decision and not based on what is right and just. Something needs to happen to put competition and thus reward back into the computer industry. Without major remedies, in a few years, all hope of innovation will be gone, and we will have one choice, whether it is good or bad.

Please reconsider ... This is madness.
